DR. THOMASON RESEARCHES LOADING ON JOINTS

Effects of shoeing on loading pressure on QH joints

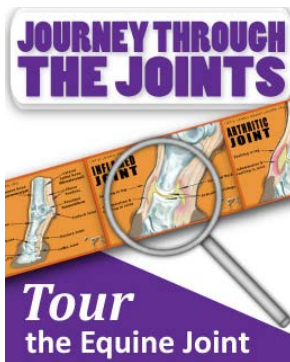

Daniell Halucha is working with Dr. Thomason studying the changes in loading pressure using the sensors shown

As a horse owner, one of the many questions you will almost inevitably ask yourself is "to shoe or not to shoe?". Many variables may affect your answer, and an exciting new research project at the University of Guelph should soon shed some more light on this age-old question. Dr. Jeff Thomason is working on a project investigating the changes of loading pressure on the joints of quarter horses as it relates to shoeing.

Musings of a horse nerd and online student

EQUINE GUELPH helping horses for life™

I now have a broader perspective of how the industry operates and understand that all equine pursuits are a part of it. I've also become increasingly aware of how many routine management practices are not necessarily in the best interest of the horse.
